The secret is out—Thursday, Nov. 27, is Thanksgiving day.

The people of Vermont may prepare themselves for a long, long trial when the case of State vs. Graham is started.

Tammany hall, although beaten in the New York election, is still a power not to be treated lightly. The victory over Tammany was so slight that there probably will not be any fear of over-confidence in the next election.

The election balances were delicately adjusted in Maryland, where the result in a total vote of 221,063 swings on 198 votes. "Maryland, My Maryland" is really nobody's Maryland when it comes to the political side.

The spectacle of well-dressed men and women looting coal trucks in the streets of Vienna and carrying off the coal in their overcoats and skirts may be repeated in many an American city if this strike of the soft coal miners continues. In fact, the governor of Oklahoma is reported to have recommended already that the law of self-preservation be resorted to and that the people steal any coal that comes within their sight—on the railroads. Fortunately, all governors have not come to that state of mind.

An indication of the stability of financial life in the United States is given by the statement of Comptroller of the Currency Williams that in the past 10 months not a single national bank in the country has been forced to close its doors. Were the record of other banks to be made public it probably would be shown that those banks had enjoyed a record almost as good as that of the national banks. The soundness of the banks is one of the most encouraging signs of our national life, and, indirectly, of the lives of the individual people of the country.

PAY OF CITY OFFICERS.

In commenting upon the failure of some municipalities to keep proper check on expenditure of municipal funds, the comment having been brought out through the discovery that Barre was paying for street lighting service which it had not received, the Rutland News remarks: "Every municipality should have a system of regularly checking up its bills. But here is the situation: The city expects its officials, mayor and aldermen, to do the public business for the honor of it. It pays them nothing. And it is everlastingly true in the long run that what costs nothing is worth what it costs. One of the great needs in all of the cities is a businesslike system which is the cheapest and most efficient in the end." There is no fault to find with the contemporary's call for a "businesslike system"; such a system is very much to be desired in any community. But when the contemporary speaks about city officials—mayor and aldermen—working for nothing, the application does not apply to Barre, however much it may apply to Rutland and some other places. To be sure, Barre does not pay a munificent salary to its mayor and aldermen; but those officials do not work for nothing by any means, while at the same time they are permitted to continue in their own vocations. The mayor of Barre gets $300 a year flat salary and the aldermen get 30 cents an hour for their services, whether those services be in attendance at meetings of the city council or of committees or of checking up the street lights, etc. That is not entirely giving their services to the municipality, as a literal interpretation of the Rutland contemporary's remarks would lead one to think was the intent of its comment. If there are any municipalities of the size of Barre and Montpelier, which are not paying their mayor and aldermen, it would seem that the amount of work required demands some remuneration.

In the Mind

Saving money, like every other good act, begins in the mind. Set it down as a principle from which you will never depart that a certain portion of all you make shall be saved. Cultivate this habit of thought. Thoughts are things. And the most fruitful seed in the efficient mind is the constant thought of thrift.
